FINTECH

The Maples Group FinTech team includes several of Ireland's leading regulatory, technology and commercial lawyers combined with industry professionals. As a market leader, the Maples Group's law firm, Maples and Calder is a global legal services firm advising the world's largest financial institutions and leading technology companies, we are at the forefront of the FinTech legal landscape.

With the parameters of FinTech being defined and redefined, so too is the legal framework in which our clients operate. As existing financial institutions become more digitalised, agile and advanced, challenger platforms are faced with the burden of increasing regulatory requirements. We have seen many smaller FinTech companies partner with larger financial institutions, or receive investment from larger financial institutions which have the infrastructure in place to operate regulated businesses.

As a firm that innovates, we are at the cutting edge of rapidly intersecting markets. Our FinTech professionals draw on the excellence of our long-standing practices, which include banking, corporate, data, commercial and technology, finance, financial services regulatory and tax. Our multidisciplinary team advises the full spectrum of FinTechs, from the largest global financial institutions to challenger digital banks, e-money and payment firms, right through to scaling start-ups raising capital to execute on disruptive business plans. The increased complexity of the regulatory environment, the evolution of traditional business models intermediated by new technologies and the real world risks presented by data security pose exceptional challenges for FinTech companies.

We deliver highly focused and commercial advice to ensure that our clients successfully navigate these challenges across all segments of their business.
