An acknowledged expert in banking and finance law, John has advised a wide range of domestic, EU/EEA and international financial institutions, including banks and private equity houses, on transactional and regulatory issues. He has also advised on security and contractual issues in the prime brokerage market. John is a consultant assisting the Maples Finance and Regulation teams on a range of matters, including anti-money laundering/counter terrorist finance compliance, conduct of business liability, payment services and passporting issues. He has also had experience of a number of mergers and acquisitions in the financial services sector, as well as in a number of bank transfer schemes.

Background

John joined the Maples Group in 2013. He has practised as a banking lawyer for many years in leading firms in London and Dublin, before becoming a senior counsel in 2011. John is also the author of the leading Irish text on Banking Law and regularly contributes to international legal publications and conferences.
